DESCRIPTION

944 Soriana Sofa by Afra & Tobia Scarpa for Cassina.

Available as a two or three-seater sofa, the 944 Soriana sofa is a generous design that adds casual comfort to any home, while also inviting a sense of sophistication.

The Soriana Sofa was first designed by Afra and Tobia Scarpa in 1969. Cassina has redeployed the Soriana range and has rebooted it using environmentally friendly materials and new colours.

In 1970 the Soriana was awarded a Compasso d'Oro prize solidifying its standing as a style icon. Defined by its voluminous curves, Soriana is wrapped, generously with a fixed upholstery, which forms relaxed creases around the body of the chair. Upholstered buttons adorn the sofa adding a quilted effect, both on the seat and backrest.

Cassina has introduced a range of luxurious fabrics and leathers which can be paired with a black, white, China red, blue or green painted metal frame.

In the 1960s and 70s, Cassina was experimenting with materials and forms and developing designs with advanced solutions. Soriana remains largely the same today as it did back then, although materials and construction have been redeveloped for an eco-friendly version, which has a lower impact on the planet but a higher level of comfort.

The original polyurethane structure of the Soriana collection has been substituted for a series of bags filled with BioFoam® microspheres, which have an organic base created from biopolymers. This material is durable enough for long-term use while also being biodegradable and can be industrially composted.

Recycled blown fibre padding also adds to the comfort of the seat. This fibre is produced from PET recovered from Plastic Bank ®. An initiative that involves local communities collecting plastic before it reaches the sea. This padding is wrapped around the structure of the seat almost like a duvet.
